Before the great Dock strike, a strike was threatened among the stokers of the whole of the London Gas Companies, and the stokers formed a union to carry out their ideas. 6th inst., and may be expected here | The strike was averted by the Directors wisely conceding a just demand of the men, by allowing the men to work 8-hour in the place of 12-hour shifts, on the same wages. This meant putting on an extra gang of men, and in the case of one London Company alone the increased wages of this one gang of men was computed to reach the figure of £50,009 per annum. Barring Le Courrier d'Haiphong says that five extra | small incidental differences complete satissteamers will be put on the Haiphong- faction was given to the London gas Hongkong line during the rice season—the stokers; and during the Dock strike, the fact was lost eight of by the public, that the union of gas stokers was extending all over the country, and that the men were agitating to be put upon the same footing as the London men. In a large number of gas works the matter was settled amicably in nearly all cases, the 8-hour shift being adopted in place of the 12-hour shift, and upon the same wages. In one or two towns. however, the men increased their demands, and laid down such terms as it was almost impossible for the Directors to accede to, such as a demand for double pay for Sunday work, a free week's holiday during the year with pay, no non-union men to be employed &c. &c.; the most noticable example being that of Bristol. The Directors of that city, after making a huge boast of being able to carry on the works without their men, made arrangements to get men from other towns, but owing entirely to the incompetency of the Directors and the Secretary (the three engineers not having been consulted in the matter) the whole affair ended in a fiasco, not an outside man having de la Jaille had intended to accompany been allowed by the strikers to enter any him, when at the last moment the Gover- of the three works, and in many cases the nor was, to his great regret, prevented from men arrived at the railway stations in one leaving the house by a sudden attack of train, only to take the next one home spain. illness. It remains to be seen, where the Directors of a Gas Company wisely concede a just domand to their workmen, and these same men stand out for something out of all reason, whether the public sympathy will remain with the strikers or revert to the employers. An amusing story is being told in Lincoln's Inn of an old woman who recently appeared Court. An impecunious old man whom she was suing for arrears of rent—he had lodged in her humble house-informed the judge that he would only be able to pay off the debt by very small instalments. - What terms are you prepared to accept?' THE NATAL IN A TYPHOON.

A BEJOINDER. The eventful voyage of the Natal from Hongkong to Saigon a few weeks ago has been a fruitful subject of correspondence. We have related the experience of several passengers, the last being a very sensational narrative which appeared in the N.-C. Daily News. Now we have got in the same journal what may be called the other side language by Captain P. Bonnefoy, commander of the Diemnah. The following is a 'mother came here a while ago and offered translation of the Captain's letter to our

According to your correspondent, tre Captain precipitated his ship into the typhoon by ignorance, by giddiness almost as a moth burns itself in the candle flame without knowing what it does. For my part I never accepted that estim-

I should have been obliged to let it pass had I not yesterday, been shown a letter from another passenger which enables me to form a correct judgment, not from a narrative. which would have no more value than the first, but from simply ascertaining the hours at which certain things happened. Here is a resume of the letter. The Natal left Hongkong advised of a typhoon travelling towards the West. The Captain, having made his calculations, thought he was able to gain in speed on the storm, cut its trajectory and run and find good weather in the South. To accomplish this he gave his vessel the maximum possible speed with sail and steam. On the 31st October, about 11 o'clock at night, the Natal felt the first symptoms of the approach of the typhoon. About one o'clock on the morning of thank 1st November the wind greatly increased in strength and it was necessary to think of brailing up and taking in the sails. During that operation an enormous wave (viole t coun de mer) struck the rudder and broke the trusses which supported it. The vessel, being no longer navigable, wont athwart the sea, and the Captain was obliged to stop his engine and, consequently, the vessel. The cyclone; gaining in speed, came up on him. From that moment the weather of course got worse and worse. It was in this terrible situation that the crewendeavoured to get control of the rudder. which was violently shaken by an enormous force." Ask any sailor what sort of a work that was in such a moment. Twice they succeeded and twice did the sea destroy what they had done. The Captain then called his officers and simply said to them:

Gentlemen, as you know, the situation is and display all the energy of which he is capable. And the struggles continued. About six o'clock in the morning the wind ceased all of a sudden and there was a calm for twenty minutes. They were in the centre of the typhoon. But soon the tem-(members of Committee), and Mr H. L. pest recommenced with greater force than over. At last the barometer began to rise, and about half-past nine in the morning the Report which has been before the public From these particulars it evidently. for some days may, I think, be taken as follows :- That the Natal, when it was read, and it will I hope be consider. stopped in its course about one o'clock in ed as on the whole satisfactory. LADY DUFFERIN'S 'LIFE IN INDIA. Lady Dufferin's account of 'Our Vice-regal Life in India (John Murray) will give pleasure even to those who do not ordinarily take much interest in our Eastern dependency. Anglo-Indians and Philo Indiana will naturally revol in it, but it has qualities which will commond it even to the indifferent coneral reader. These goodly volumes are eminently readable They consist of selections from a journal originally written by Lady Dufferin with a view to transmission to her mother, and hey have all the charm of non-premeditation and familiarity. They are serious in tone when seriors subjects are discussed, but where lightness and brightness are permissible they are abundantly present. and one recognises that Lady Dufferin brought into the family into which sho married a vivacity notably akin to that which has always been the attribute of the Shoridans. She is never flippant, but every thing she writes is 'gilded by the gracious cleam ' of sympathetic humour. She is almost always in the best of spirits, and if her description of Vicerezal life in India does not profess to be solidly informing, it is at least delightfully frank and engaging. On the very threshold of their reign in ndia Lord and Lady Dufferin were brought face to face with a curious local custom.

When an old voyager to the East goes on board one of the new steamers that carry the mails, he naturally admires their greater aize, and the greater attention that is paid to internal decoration than used to be the case, but what strikes him more than anything else is the immense improvement in the second cabin accommodation, especially on the P. & O. steamers. On the steamers of the Messageries the French love of equality long since displayed itself in the second saloon, which is really, as regards its position in the ship and its lighting, befor than the chief saloon, while the second class passengers have always been allowed the use of the quarter-deck. In the P. & O. stenmers not so very long ago everybody who was anybody at all went first class, and the traveller would sometimes go from Sucz to Galle or from Galle to Hongkong, without its ever being brought to his notice that there were any accord class passengers on hoard: Subsequently at some function he would meet a most respectable person, and would learn with surprise that the unknown came out by the P. & O. steamer Jonna at the same time as himself, or he would perhaps see some names in the list of 'passengers arrived' in the local paper, which he did not recognise as those of companions of his voyage; but beyond this the very existence of a second saloon on the Joppa was unknown to him. Things are very much changed now. Just as everybody travels third-class by rail in England now, because there is no fourth, so chow Teas to be reported on by the teamen nice people are beginning to travel so. of that port, they think they can safely say cond class by P. & O. Even in the strictest of the other kinds that, whatever may have days of nobblesse oblige, the second cabin passenger got to his destination just as soon and just as safely as his more expensive fellow-traveller, and he was willing to but up with some discomfort in consideration of the oxtra sum that his self-denial gave him to spend at home. It is not merely the depreciation of silver that has brought about this change, for first class fares have fallen a good deal more in the last twenty-five years than silver has Compatition as usual is at the bottom of i The excellent accommodation offered to passengers to India by such steamers as those of the Star and City and Clan lines. or to China by the Blue Funnel, Mutual and Glon lines, has obliged the P. & O. to provide at least as good accommodation at about equal prices, and the result is that the accord class accommodation on the newer P. & O. steamers is, as has been often remarked, far better than the firstclass was in the old days; and if the table is not so lavish, it is more than sufficient.

To the Australians we owe something of this, as other improvements in the mail service. Indeed, it is hardly going too far to say that before long, unless there i another great fall in first-class fares, the majority of passengers will travel secondclass, and the first saloon will be reserved for very exclusive people, as it is said that the tea generally grows on the slopes of first-class carriages on continental railways are reserved for princes, lunatics, and the plant has to make a greater effort to by reading a correspondence that has lately | in other countries. REVIVING THE TEA TRADE. A NATIVE OPINION.

The Taotai has received the following port from ten Chinese gentlemen, forming the Committee of the Tea Guild, giving their suggestions towards the revival of the Chinese toa-trade now suffering severely from Indian and other competition. It was called for by the Taotai on 11th November, in pursuance of an order from the Vicerov Li Hung-chang, received in consequence of instructions from the Tsung-li Yamen dated 30th September. The Yamen, which had already directed the Viceroy's attention to this matter a year before, is now desirous of obtaining the opinion of the leading teamen with regard to a recent report of the Commissioner of Customs at Tamsui to the Governor of Formosa. In the latter report ne Commissioner had ascribed the fallingoff in the Formosan tea-export to two auses; the adulteration of the leaf, someimes to the extent of ten per cent, with extraneous substances, (principally, however, tea stalks) and the excessive amount of inland duty levied. The teamen's report s as follows :--They think the complaint of adulteration not justified by the facts. They have mo personal experience of the preparation of the leas which they sell to foreigners at Shanghai, Kinkiang, or Hankow. These are the red teas (i.e., black teas) of Hunar, Hupeh, and Kiangai, the green tea of Anhui, and the Pingsuey of Chekiang; but on the Fouchew teas they have no information to give. Leaving, therefore, the Foobeen the case ten years ago, at present adulteration practically does not exist. At that time some Chêkiang Pingsueys were falsified with siftings, and with little pellets of rice paste; but the strenuous efforts made by the Guild to oheck this abuse, combined with the present abundance and cheapness of the supply, have combined to suppress adulteration, and any defects in quality now-a-days can be only caused by original want of flavour of the pure article and bad methods of preparing it for the market. The regorous scrutiny, moreover, to which every chop is subjected by the foreign buyers at the Treaty ports would make any attempt at imposition so hopeless, that no teaman would think it worth his while. even if his conscience would consent to it to make such an attempt. As for tea-siftings, they have their own buyers, the bricktea merchants; and tea stalks find a profitable market in the interior. The real cause of the decline in the tearade is therefore to be sought not in any imaginary adulteration of tea in China, but in the excessive inland and export duties levied there, and in defects in growing and preparing; and the following six suggestions are put forward by the Guild as the remedy for that decline.
